Memo From The Board

Our outreach and education thrust for the past several years has been "The Naked Plays." It has been heart warming and very encouraging to see and to read through the many plays that have been written by playwrights all across the county, and submitted to the Lake Edun Foundation for review and judging. Our budget and constraints of time only allows for the production of a limited few of the scripts that we receive.

The plays selected for this year are each unique in the way they present positive body image or the naturalness of clothes-free living. Each was selected to enhance the image and ideals of naturism.

Last year's plays were ground breaking in the Topeka area. No other theater group had done anything like "The Naked Plays" before! The reaction was surprising and a bit astonishing! We received several hundred evaluation forms from those attending. Only one was negative! Several were neutral and the largest percentage were positive with their comments about the plays and actors!

Last fall we scheduled the plays to tentatively be in the October time frame. Other productions scheduled at the same time caused a drought of actors. We moved them to this spring only to have the same drought again! Only this time it was lead by the production of "The Full Monty!" This play, of British origin, follows six unemployed steelworkers who form a striptease act to help ends meet. Each time they are cheered by the ladies in attendance and urged to show the full monty.

It is said that imitation is the sincerest form of flattery. It would seem that the theater companies in the area have done just that! Seeing the success of Lake Edun Foundation plays on the first go around has emboldened them to follow suit! Perhaps they even hope to upstage us!

However perhaps at a closer look it shows how much more education is needed. Although the plot of "The Full Monty" shows the plight of these steelworkers who have lost their jobs and incomes, the use of nudity and suggestive nudity is in performing striptease. This is probably not something for adolescent and younger children to view. Rather, the striptease is done to inspire the erotic and places the nude body form squarely in the equation nudity=sex. This message is the opposite of what our foundation is trying to promote.

On second thought, what appears as imitation on the outside is really a form of opposition to what the foundation invested so heavily in to teach.

Items We Need

- Tops for trash cans
- Non-motorized boats
- Chipper/shredder we can use about once a month
- Lawn or Lounge Chairs

Work Days And Our Road

We now have all (or at least most) of the pieces in place to complete work on the first leg of our new road. If the weather cooperates and no conflicts present themselves, both John and Tractor Doug hope to be on hand either (or both) of the workdays in April. Once they get a road bed completed, we will be in a position to begin bringing rock for the surface.

If you are available, plan to join us for these work days. It is a wonderful way to renew acquaintances, give a little back to the place we all love so much and make a tangible difference. Most Eduners find work days are a surprisingly relaxing change of pace from their normal routine.

Lounge Chairs

Several years ago, an alert Eduner discovered a country club near him was replacing the lounge chairs by their swimming pool. Being the good samaritan he is, he offered to "carry" them off and loaded them into his pick-up truck.

These chairs have served Eduners well for a number of years. However, if they were old when we acquired them, they are even older now. Time has come to consider replacing them.

Since all country clubs must replace their lawn chairs from time-to-time, hopefully all Eduners and our friends will keep alert for another opportunity to help a club dispose of its old lawn chairs.

Don't be shy. If you are a member of a club or become aware one is about to upgrade its pool side equipment, offer to help dispose of their old chairs. You'll be doing them a favor.

A Simple, Thank You

John S.

The board would like to thank those that have been doing the sauna, and also Beth who has taken the time to call members to get together at the sauna and for organizing the pot luck. Hopefully we shall have many more get together, and it does not matter where.

If you have a home that we can gather at or even an event that we have to be clothed, please leave word at the Barn and share your ideas, or get hold of one of the board members. Once again, Thanks Folks.

World Naked Gardening Day

The promoters of the Third Annual World Naked Gardening Day (WNGD) invite us all to, Get Ready! As the web site promoting WNGD says, people across the globe are encouraged, on Saturday, May 5, 2007 to tend their portion of the world's garden clothed as nature intended.

Why garden naked these intrepid promoters ask? First of all, it's fun! Second only to swimming, gardening is at the top of the list of family friendly activities people are most ready to consider doing nude. Moreover, our culture needs to move toward a healthy sense of both body acceptance and our relation to the natural environment. Gardening naked is not only a simple joy, it reminds us – even if only for those few sun kissed minutes – that we can be honest with who we are as humans and as part of this planet.

All that's involved is getting naked and making the world's gardens – whatever their size, public or private – healthier and more attractive. WNGD has no political agenda, nor is it owned or organized by any one particular group. Naked individuals and groups are encouraged to adopt the day for themselves.

Walt Whitman, a poet of a bygone era wrote, "Sweet, sane, still Nakedness in Nature! – if poor, sick, prurient humanity in cities might really know you once more! Is not nakedness then indecent? No, not inherently. It is your thought, your sophistication, your fear, your respectability that is indecent. There come moods when these clothes of ours are not only too irksome to wear, but are themselves indecent. Perhaps indeed he or she to whom the free exhilarating ecstasy of nakedness in Nature has never been eligible (and how many thousands there are!) has not really known what purity is – nor what faith or art or health really is."

Lake Edun is a naturally growing wilderness area rapidly being engulfed by development. It is a bit of wildness that shows the beauty of nature and nourishes the soul. There is something restorative about wandering the trails, and taking the opportunity for solitude and reflection. There is incredible beauty to be seen in the passing of geese on our lake, to share a sunset with friends, or in the early morning to study the dew jeweled webs spiders have industriously spread across trails, and if you are very lucky, to see the deer peacefully feeding.

Lake Edun is a garden that we cherish and are called to nurture. WNGD is an opportunity for all Eduners to volunteer some time and effort to plant, clear, prune, and otherwise tend the garden. Join us! There's lot's to do!

Do We Need Each Other?

Recently, after a short lapse do to administrative errors, I received the spring copy of "Nude and Natural" published by the Naturist Society. It is a magazine that I enjoy for its trip reports and stories of naturist events around the county and around the globe.

This copy also had enclosed with it forms requesting donations to NEF, Naturist Education Fund and NAC, Naturist Action Committee with brief descriptions of both committee's work in the area of supporting naturist activities. Both of these groups are sub groups to The Naturist Society, know to most of us as TNS.

It was TNS that came to our defense here in Kansas when, several years ago, a bill was proposed to make all nudity a crime. TNS members came to Topeka and testified in opposition to the law giving well thought out comments on the unintended consequence of an ill-conceived piece of legislation. It was the TNS that supported us with a donation to help cover the cost of the first production of the "The Naked Plays".

TNS board members have supported the Lake Edun Foundation through many years of conflict and struggle with personal phone calls and encouragement. Articles have been published in "Nude and Natural" outlining our trials and growth here in Kansas.

Indeed the Lake Edun Foundation has been greatly helped by our association with TNS.

It is troubling to see printouts from TNS showing less than 20% of LEF members as TNS members! Less than 20%! Who do we think will help us if TNS were not there? Indeed, who else has helped us? Shouldn't we at least support those who support us? Contact Maxine for more information on TNS membership. Remember when you get or renew a membership through Lake Edun Foundation with TNS, you are showing support for those ideals you wish to preserve.

Report On March Work Day

By: John S.

Well we had a good work day in spite of me being the only one at the Lake doing any work. So the we was just me and my chainsaw. I am used to working alone so it was no big deal and now we (as in others) need to have the brush and trees cut up more or the use of a wood chipper.

I worked to expand the camp area to the north where we hope people will soon be able to drive from the existing parking area. The area was so thick that even though I worked for a couple of hours, I could not tell how big an area I actually cleared. Once the brush is removed, we will see that the camp area is at least a quarter, or third bigger.

I do this kind of work everyday so I get a lot done, but with help I know we could accomplish so much more. Anybody willing to work can contact me any day for an hour or two, and I can meet them at our wonderful site.

At our board meeting that was ended with good food, I got calls on both my cell phone and the barn phone from people wanting to know if we are open. One individual is planning to come next week, and the others as soon as it is warmer.

As for me I shed my clothes after the work I did and laid on my cot just really enjoying the way the sun felt on my bare necessities. Everything was wonderful till that sun went into hiding behind a cloud. Then it was a little cool, but I got a taste of what I enjoy and long for after all the cold weather that has passed by our way. At least I hope that's the last.

As I write this it is rainy and cool to the South of Topeka. Mother Nature I feel, is just a teasing me with the taste of sunshine. Who knows, we could be soon saying it's too hot.

I hope everyone will let others know we are still open and enjoying life sans clothing when we can. As for me, I have invited several people to come look around and see if they want to become a part of our group. I do enjoy talking to people almost as much as I like food.

Please remember we will need a care taker. If you know of someone that might like working at Lake Edun please tell them to call the barn and leave a message soon.

Naturist or Nudist? A Conversation

Here is an exchange between two people from an Internet discussion board. The discussion is about the age old question of the distinction between a nudist and a naturist. At this point, I don't know if it really matters to most people. However, the points made by the two writers are interesting and worthy of being passed on. Perhaps some readers would like to put in your two cents worth on this topic. [Ed.]

I've always liked the joke that "A nudist likes to go around naked, whereas a naturist likes to go around naked, and give lectures."

To say one is a nudist is just to say that one likes to be without clothes. To be a "naturist" implies to me that there's a philosophy behind it; that we've thought about what nudity means to us, and how it's more than just a question of being naked. We might be thinking about our relationship to the world, about contact with the environment, about the vulnerability of a bare human body. Unlike most other animals, we don't even have much fur to protect us!

And on the topic of vulnerability, when we're nude we open ourselves up to other people. What I've sometimes said is that when we shake hands with another person, we're showing that we're willing to step close and risk an attack, and we're proving that we haven't got a weapon in our hand. We're not afraid to look into the other one's face, and be looked at as well, and to touch the other one's skin and be touched. And I'd say being naked has some aspects of that same concept, only more so.

We show the most "private", and physically fragile, areas of the body, and we're simultaneously dropping our protection and making it impossible to conceal any weapon. It implies an increased level of trust, a promise that I won't hurt you, and I'm certain that you won't hurt me.

Now of course all this is based on our experience of wearing clothes, and occasionally taking them off. If we were nude all the time, I'm sure everything I've said would become reduced in importance.

There are records of tribesmen going naked into battle with rivals. If they were used to being naked, they probably didn't feel particularly vulnerable. For us, though, it's essentially impossible to become completely used to being naked.

I wonder what it would be like if all our human interactions took place without a barrier of clothing separating us, and we'd reached the point where we didn't miss it. Would social life be different?

"Rousland Sorokine" wrote: Even nudism is beneficial though, yet many can't really explain why. I would like to try to explain why I consider myself to be a nudist and what I believe are the benefits. This is only my opinion I know not everyone will agree with me.

I believe that a naturist is a person who believes there are health and well being issues to be achieved from exposing their bodies to nature, (the sun, wind and water, etc.). Naturism is a behavior like Yoga and may be practiced anywhere and anytime to satisfy a naturists need to be naked. Therefore, being at a designated nude venue such as a nudist resort or CO beach or simply in nature is well enough.

A nudist is a person who feels that the human body is beautiful and not to be ashamed of, or hidden, or feared, and that nakedness alone is not sexual. A nudist feels that society will benefit from ridding itself of its phobia's and obsessions about the naked body and learn to appreciate one another for who we are regardless of how we look or dress, (body acceptance). When we can do this we discover that all people are beautiful. For a nudist, nakedness is a form of expression. A nudist needs to be able to be naked anywhere at anytime. We view nudity a right that is being oppressed, I think most people who call themselves either a nudist or a naturist is actually a little of both.

Annual Naked Party At Bowdoin University

Something unusual is going on at Bowdoin University in Maine. Students organized a naked party in the spring of 2004. How did such an outrageous thing get started?

"Basically, it started with us waking up one morning and deciding not to wear clothes," stated one of the two students who started the naked party tradition. "But, we couldn't really leave the apartment without clothes on. So, we thought, 'Why don't we just invite our friends over?'"

At the inaugural naked party only 12 people came. Now, the annual event thrives, with attendance having reached almost 80 people at the best attended party. The party grew because of curiosity. Students heard the party talked about enough that they were convinced they had to make it to the next one.

At the annual naked party held on November 11, party goers who were questioned agreed that after the initial five minutes, the nakedness was no longer awkward. Their explanation for this was it helped that everyone disrobed before entering the party, and because there is an acceptance of everyone's nakedness, regardless of body type.

One of the original naked party founders observed that, "I think a lot of people feel much more comfortable with and confident about their bodies, and feel very liberated after attending a naked party." She added that the core is accepting newcomers and all body types, embracing the diversity of the bodies walking through the door.

Why Is It So?

By: Justin Morgan

A recent thread on a naturist e-mail list caught my attention. The writer was a gentleman I have had several long conversations with over the past years. Recently he and his family moved from California to the state of Washington. With the move came a whole new set of associations at work, school, church and neighborhood. It also meant finding a new place to be natural.

“Nude and Natural” has had many articles concerning the state of naturism in this part of the country. Personally it looks a lot more Utopian than what Lake Edun Foundation has had to endure for the past years since LEF became known in the community. So I was surprised when this Internet friend, Paul, began his comments with the difficulties of being a naturist in Washington.

His comments outlined what he thought was an interesting state of disassociation in his circle of naturist contacts. He has the wonderful problem of having two swims each month that he can attend! One sponsored by S.L.U.G.S and the other sponsored by TNS. He and his family are also members at one of the naturist resorts in the Seattle area. The family also enjoys going to the nude beach.

Paul and his family have now been in the Seattle area for two years. This is what he has noticed. I think it is instructional for members at LEF also.

Those who attend the SLUGS swims, with rare exception, do not attend the TNS swims. Those who belong to his naturist resort rarely attend either swim. His friends from the beach are almost never in attendance at any of the other activities! Why is this so?

Paul surmised that those at the beach probably do not want to pay for the privilege of going naked! He has been told that to be naked is a natural right and having to pay for a place just is not right! No contention here! However, those who attend the pay venues seem to think that because they have made the sacrifice to pay for a special place, they have done their part to support naturism and need not support the other activities. Would that it were so.

The result of this circular thinking is that the groups tend to be looking only in the direction they want to go and not in directions that would unite naturism with regard to furthering naturist causes with local governments, communities, and the press. These groups then appear from the outside to be anemic, small and self serving, more an annoyance than an idea to be addressed.

At least in Washington state, with the leadership of Mark Storey and others devoted to the cause, some steps, even significant steps have been taken. However, the question remains, how far could they go if united?

But what of here in Kansas? I overheard several board members at Lake Edun talking about a very similar response toward our special place. Our friends at another club appeared not to care what became of Lake Edun. Balancing this, we do appreciate having some connection with members from “The Heartland Naturists.” The question to be considered by naturists/nudists in general is, do we appear fractured and weak to outsiders looking in? Why is it so?

Before coming to Lake Edun I thought nudists were only in California, Florida and New York! Imagine my shock to find a place in my own back yard! How far could we go if we would at least support each other’s organizations vocally, and if so, how much further could we advance naturism in the Midwest?

My friend Paul has wondered in posts on the e-mail list what the state of naturism would be if all the groups pulled together in Seattle? He also wonders what the future will hold for the wider acceptance of naturism.

Our national history is full of instances of injustice that existed for years until those who felt they were being oppressed took a stand and organized. As the groups organized and different parts of the country joined in with the whole, changes were made. The unified voices rose in volume until those in Washington heard and introduced changes that legally became binding.

I think this was the hope of the founders of the naturist movement in the United States. TNS and AANR have been in the vanguard of this organized front for naturism. Yet the groups themselves tend to remain aloof from each other. The LEF experience has shown that none of our naturist neighbors have pitched in to help with any kind of support. This indifference makes it appear, at least on the surface, that the other clubs are unconcerned with our future, as if has nothing to do with them. When in fact, what it will do is reduce the number of places where we can be free and make the naturist/nudist movement as a whole weaker.

I now want to turn to a related concern regarding the future of naturism raised by my conversations with other naturists. Let’s add in some information that is alarming to me, and should be of concern to all friends of naturism. It goes hand in hand with the whole discussion of strengthening naturism now and for the future.

The average age of LEF members is 55 plus. Where are the younger members? Where are the families? What does this demographic say about where we are going? This has long been a discussion on naturist websites and not just a few articles have been written on the graying of naturism. Obviously if the age continues to increase the question answers itself.

I would suppose that by this time in the naturist history, we would be seeing second and third generation naturists. Children of those early pioneers would now be taking the reins and their children would be getting ready for their time of leadership. A continuum would be forming. But where is the next generation of leaders?

Another couple I communicate with is raising their children with naturist ideals. Since they are now approaching those dreaded teenage years I asked them the following question: Kathy, have you had time to talk further with your kids about family naturist feelings and attitudes?

She replied, “Justin, interestingly, I did broach the subject with our very confident, brilliant, gentle, yet opinionated 11 year old son the next evening. Alan was in the room too, but mostly I lead the conversation. I think that both Alan and I were flummoxed! Perhaps we simply didn’t approach it in a way he could truly understand, I don’t know.

“Anyway, basically, he had very little understanding of what I was even talking about. It seemed like he couldn’t truly grasp why it would be such a big issue. I was trying not to lead him, but he just didn’t seem to comprehend the nuances of what I was saying/asking. It was very interesting.

“We’ve talked in the past about raising our family without shame, and he seems to completely understand that, but to ask very specifically about our naturist practice and compare that to how it “could be otherwise” was difficult for him to comprehend.

“The naturist attitude is simply who our children are. They aren’t experienced enough in life to be able to empathize yet with the way the rest of society tends to see things.

“It was an interesting conversation to say the least. I think it really ended up being more about informing him of the ‘bigger picture’ of how being raised as naturists can affect their lives as adults for the positive.

“He mostly asked questions about what I was saying. I did end up explaining many of the positive benefits that we as a family will/can enjoy. For instance, I explained that we don’t have ‘no potty talk’ rules, (meaning that children don’t have to feel they can’t ask questions about bodies or body parts). Also, we don’t encourage keeping secrets in our home, (which can protect younger children if someone should ever try to abuse them and tell them that it’s a secret).

“Our children are very emotionally close. They are independent, but the relationship between them is quite extraordinary. I think I’ve mentioned it before, but just in case: both our children have lovely rooms that we remodeled for them when we bought our home. Yet, our daughter chooses to sleep in her brother’s room in the bunk beds so they can be closer.

“When I mentioned that if we weren’t naturists this would very likely not be the case, the both of them were horrified and couldn’t understand why. We tried to explain that the openness and acceptance they enjoy as naturists flows into other aspects of their lives. They truly are best friends – we all are within our family.

“I suppose the one thing, (that made Alan laugh) that I recall specifically was that I asked our son: ‘Do you ever wonder what it would be like if you were raised like other kids?’ His response: ‘Why would I want to shoot myself in the foot?’ ”

Kathy, (who is glad her son is happy in his home) added, “I think this was a wonderful exchange between us and the kids. However, one realization popped out to me. The children did not at this point in life understand completely the benefit of living clothes free.”

After considering what Kathy had to say, it occurred to me that this family lives much as many naturists live today. They live in the suburbs. They go to school, church and shop in the same community as all the other people do. They do not live in a naturist community. I had thought the differences would be blatantly obvious to them. Yet, the son seemed only, at the end, to suggest that he had noticed any difference in lifestyle from his peers when he said, “Why would I want to shoot myself in the foot?”

Despite being raised in a naturist home, it seemed that Kathy’s son did not to understand the clothes-free aspect of his life being part of that bigger picture. In other words, his family was different because his family was different. Like his friend Danny’s family is different just because they are a different family! Naturism was taken for granted. It wasn’t a cause for him.

I remember early on in my own “naturist discovery,” I was VERY fixated on the idea of having a, (presumably on-line – and it was) chat with someone who was raised as a naturist. I REALLY WANTED their perspective and expected it to be INCREDIBLY enlightening, if not virtually earth-shattering.

When the opportunity finally arrived and I actually had the chat, I left the chat absolutely confounded, because I kept firing off questions and the poor guy didn’t even have answers. It finally dawned on me that HE had absolutely NO PERSPECTIVE for MY questions. We practically couldn’t even effectively communicate about the ideas that I had so very much wanted answered and thought someone in his position could so profoundly enlighten me on.

Incidentally, I’ve also, (since) at various times observed something else. Because “second generation naturists” oftentimes grow up “taking it for granted,” many of them leave it, because they just can’t “see the big deal!”

Perhaps we think that if we just demonstrate naturism to our kids, they will understand that we do it because of all the ideals we personally live by. Yet it might well be the case that in fact they do not understand and file this “difference” within their family as being, “no big deal.”

For sure, the generation that is growing up now will not simply continue as naturists just because we do it, or their grandparents do it. They will want to know why. And if the why is not sufficient, they will leave for other lifestyles.

I’m no scholar, and I’m not trying to convert the converted. However, I am trying to bring to everyone’s attention two items which, if we do not address them, will prove to be a great hindrance to the forward movement of naturism.

First, we need to be friends and supporters of our own cause. We need to belong to a national organization so when they speak on our behalf in our town, or state, or in Washington, DC, we have a voice advocating for our interests. We need to put our money where our desires are, in causes that further the life choice we have all embraced.

Secondly, while we recognize that naturism isn’t a panacea for all problems, we need to make sure that our naturist ideals are understood correctly in our homes and in the community. Our children and grandchildren need to know that naturism isn’t simply another superficial recreational choice. Most importantly, they need to be taught the truth about the inherent goodness and wholesomeness of the human body.

This belief is central to being a naturist, but is vehemently opposed by a society that confuses lewd sexuality with merely being nude. The price of this blind confusion is numerous unintended consequences and much suffering. Thus, the naturist perspective needs to be a big deal in our children's lives! It is the kind of big deal that helps give balance to their lives and to our society as a whole.

I will leave the writing of research to others. It's good to have and to read. But, pointing to someone else's research as a reason for my personal belief will do little. It must vibrate within me. It must show in how I live and act. We must remember that the, "Why is it so?" question is best answered this way – "Because I let it be so."

Dutch Gym to Introduce 'Naked Sunday'

Self-conscious about what you wear while working out? A Dutch gym plans to introduce "Naked Sunday" for people who like to huff and puff in the buff.

The owner of Fitworld gym in the town of Heteren, said he got the idea in part from two of his customers who are avid nudists.

"I heard that some other gyms are offering courses on 'pole-dancing' as a sport, so I thought: Why not bring something new to the market?" de Man said.

He said the response had been overwhelming, positive and negative.

The 70,000-member Dutch Federation of Naturists was curious to see if Fitworld's plan would work, a spokesman said.

"We recently conducted a large survey among our members, and most prefer to exercise with their clothes on," he said. "The most popular activities (for nudists) are things you do outdoors, like walking on the beach, or swimming in a lake, or maybe gardening."

The first question Fitworld customers were asking was whether it would be sanitary.

Nude exercisers would be required to put towels down on weight machines and to use disposable seat covers while riding bikes. All machines would be cleaned and disinfected afterward. "We clean them every day anyway," he said.

The first "Naked Sunday" was scheduled for March 4.

"The best thing to do would be to designate everywhere as clothing optional, and we could leave little fenced in areas for the prudes to prance around in. Call them 'Prudist Camps'. They could peer out of their fences and indulge in their offensive "I'm offended" behavior whenever they saw a natural person walk by, without bothering the rest of us." – Anonymous
